What is the difference between |= and =, and how to make the best of both? A: The difference is that = is an assignment, whereas |= is a compound operator. You shouldn't make a habit of using it, at least in most cases, except when you need it because you need a ternary operator. I have a feeling you're thinking about the || and && constructs, which are also ternaries, but for something else (they're used in conditionals). A: This might help: x = 5; // variable assignment x |= 10; // compound assignment A: The RHS of an assignment must be a constant expression. That is what the meaning of "compound assignment" is. C-like languages don't have these rules -- an assignment has a place to put the RHS -- so your compiler should allow you to do anything. They are all great reads, from the lyrical to the simply delightful, and it's fun to peruse the selections that have made the best-seller lists in not just the genre of romance, but in all literature. If you're a romance reader, you must read the reviews. They're between the covers of this book. Some are clearly biased, trying to make a point or criticizing the book or the authors, while others are thoughtful and objective. You'll also find lists of recommended reading. When I was looking for suggestions for books to read with my students, I found this book a treasure. The authors take close look at a wide range of

A two-year-old girl died Friday after her mother and siblings fled the home she and her siblings had been confined to since September, when authorities executed a search warrant at the house. Araanah Leary, 2, was discovered unresponsive at the home in the 5200 block of Whitaker Avenue on Thursday. She was transported to Children's Hospital Oakland and was listed in critical condition on Friday, although family members later said she had died. Her mother, Marni Leary, and siblings, four-year-old Aaliyah and three-year-old Aryana, were not home at the time of the raid, police said. The Oakland Police Department said in a news release Saturday that the mother had called police to report that she and her children were on a bus ba244e880a
