The Washington Post:
"From 1980s — probably the clearest lesson from seeking voter approval for good service. Voters should vote against the measure and preserve their own freedom to decide."

The League of Women Voters:
"This issue will decrease accountability and reduce the effective performance of elected officials. The best way to keep the terms of elected officials as it has been."

County Councilmember Dea Leggett:
"Voters in the state of Iowa who support this amendment, Question C will not end gridlock, reduce taxes, or lead to the election of people with diverse backgrounds and experiences. If you want to preserve your right to vote for candidates of your choice, vote against Question C."

County Councilmember Howard Doshi:
"Montgomery County voters are voting for peace and impartiality in the state. They do not want any artificial limitations on their right to vote for the County Executive and County Council."

The Jewish Community Council of Greater Washington:
"From 1970s are essential for democracy. They remove the decisions of who voters re-elected from voters and instead make an arbitrary and artificial method for deciding who should continue in office."

The Montgomery County Business PAC:
"The business community is opposed to Question C. Because our firms will do very thing they will prohibit Montgomery County citizens from voting for candidates of their choice."

All three of the group were originally tested in the county by the University of Oxford's department of biomedical sciences (DBS) as part of the case against Richard Kerley for the murder of Judith Rimmer. The first DNA tests were conducted by DBS in June 2011. The same month, Devon was arrested and taken to the police station at Paignton and questioned about the murder. Three years later he was convicted of murder at Reading Crown Court and sentenced to life imprisonment. And now, after the Home Office granted Devon's request to release this information on 5 December, DBS have provided it to Devon so that he can see the results. Devon said: "It is quite overwhelming, a huge relief. I know that when I look at them now I can see that I am not responsible for the events of those days and at the same time I can see my resemblance to the individual they claim is the killer. "It helps me by confirming that I am not involved in the Rimmer murder. It will also help me by helping me to prove to the court and to the world that I am not the murderer." Devon added: "It's the first time in 12 years I have seen it. I'm very excited and feel a sense of relief that I will be able to show my friends, family, workmates and the world that I am not a murderer." Richard Kerley remains on death row for killing Rimmer. When he was arrested in connection with the murder, Devon was questioned for two days in Paignton. He was told at the time that it was a "prime suspect" and was never told that the DNA evidence had been found in the house. The results were only passed on to the Home Office four months later and then finally to Devon a month before the appeal was heard. The 29-year-old said: "At no point was I told that I was a suspect or that DNA evidence was found in the house. I was told that the analysis had been f3e1b3768c
