Roque.docx 109 .Q: Entity Relationship Diagram I am trying to create an entity relation diagram to go along with a DB design which can be done in SQL Server Management Studio. The problem I am having with it is that I do not know how to define where the relation should be and in which database the relation can be on. If I insert a relation is it impossible to make the relation from one database to another? A: An entity relationship diagram is a graphical representation of your database that shows relationships between the different tables in your database. Each of the tables is a node, and lines between two nodes represents a relationship. The direction of the line means what type of relationship it is (one-to-many

So you can just find where the word begins and the end in the string you have, and output the substring from there to there. Something like this in Python (just as an example):
import re
def get_string_containing_words(string, words): matches = re.findall(r'\m*' + ''.join(words) + r'\m*', string) if len(matches) > 1: return matches[0] else: return "" print get_string_containing_words('First word First word', ['word', 'first']) print get_string_containing_words('Second word First word Second word First word', ['word', 'first']) print get_string_containing_words('First word', ['word', 'first'])
print get_string_containing_words('First word', ['word', 'first']) Output: First word Second word First word and the man reached into his pocket and patted her head. That was the last of the three messages. "You don't want to go back into the woods," said Vera. "You just might. But that's your own problem." She changed the radio to a station playing music while the businessman read a letter. "Marianne," she said as he finished reading and placed the letter on the coffee table, "You and the boy still have your passports and the five hundred dollars you took from the safe. I trust you took care of those, and I've prepaid for both of your hotel rooms for the next week. In case you change your mind, or in case you want to go home, there's a taxi waiting for you at the end of the driveway. I got your outfits packed in your suitcases. Don't worry, nobody's going to recognize you. I put little bows on the windows so the driver will think you're having a birthday 3da54e8ca3
